Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from A Manual of History of the United States, for the Use of Schools The work now given to the public, originated in the writer s desire to obtain a book that should lessen the labor of teacher and scholar in the study of History. Owing to the multiplicity of dates, and minute events, as well as the length of the narrative in the histories in general use, the writer, in common with several of his fellow teachers, had been compelled to go over chapter by chapter, eliminating the most important events, and by means of written synoptical questions, endeavoring to remedy the fault of the larger works. This labor had to be repeated with each succeeding class. It therefore became apparent that it would be easier to write a work which should do away with this really great labor. A few words with regard to the plan of the Manual. The questions have been placed in the body of the page, but do not interrupt the narrative, while at the same time each question has a concise answer in the paragraph that follows.
