The fundamental problems of the shale oil industry are solved. Details will have to be worked out, and apparatus and manipulation will have to be modified to meet the peculiarities of our various American shales. In the opinion of the writer, the retorting presents fewer difficulties than does the refining. But many of the refining problems will vanish if the retorting is done scientifically and in obedience to chemical laws. It must not be supposed that the same methods of refining can be successfully applied to oils which are chemically very different. If this is kept in mind and the chemistry of the unsaturated hydrocarbons is mastered, the refining problems will very soon yield to chemical skill. LABORATORY STUDY OF COLORADO SHALES HISTORICAL SKETCH At the present time the distillation of shale for oil and the various by-products is an important industry in Scotland, France, Australia and New Zealand. In Germany a brown coal (lignite) is distilled in much the same way for tar and ammonia. In 1681 an English patent was issued for the making of tar and pitch from coal; in 1694 the making of pitch, tar and oyle out of a kind of stone was protected by a patent. The first commercial plant for such work appears to have been established in Sunderland, England, and produced petroleum and ammonia from coal as early as 1815. In France the distillation of shales began about 1830, and has maintained the rank of an industry...
