An example of applicant-initiated sharing occurs via tax checks required by some states. A taxpayer may authorize a third party to receive his or her IRS tax return information via consent. According to an IRS official, many states may require consents to qualify for benefits or certain types of employment. For example, the state of Missouri requires applicants to be current on their state taxes before receiving a new professional license. An example of agency-initiated sharing is an arrangement between IRS and SSA for the Combined Annual Wage Reporting Program. SSA processes and maintains W-2 and W-3 information on employees. IRS maintains personal and financial information on employees. SSA and IRS conduct exchanges of information to ensure employers are submitting accurate wage information and to identify nonfilers. The agencies have a direct data-sharing arrangement. Research...
